ON Monday this week, Masons Self Storage completed the second phase of an ambitious expansion project in the Vale.

Two years ago, the company undertook a relaunch with a complete modernisation of its facility.

State-of-the-art features such as 24/7 access with personalised PIN codes, ESCORTA lifts for seamless journeys between the car park and storage units, and upgraded CCTV cameras and security were all added.

But demand for flexible storage has continued to increase, leading the company to launch a second phase in November 2017. It has been backed by the Masons Group and an investment of £1.2m.

The expansion includes an additional 215 units in a greater range of sizes than before.

It also introduces a whole new concept of 'Work, Rest and Store' in the Vale, aimed at the increasing number of business customers who need more flexibility when juggling the demands of their businesses.

At Masons' new 'Business Zone,' customers will see bigger corridors to accommodate larger deliveries and there will be flexible working spaces for business customers. Customers will be able to connect free to WIFI, charging stations, work remotely and enjoy a range of refreshments.

Gordon Mason, Director of the Masons Group, explained: "We chose to undertake the expansion project at Masons Self Storage as a response to customer demand, especially from the growing number of businesses that require a flexible solution to storing."

"The expansion project allows us to attract new customers while simultaneously providing unrivalled services to our existing customers."

'Dying Matters' Awareness Week will answer those difficult questions

ARE there questions around death and the funeral industry that you have been meaning to ask someone?

Local funeral celebrant Ceri-Lou Newman is organising a community event to encourage people to be more open in talking about death and funeral wishes.

The free and informal evening, open to all, is being hosted by the Cardiff & Glamorgan Crematorium on Port Road East, Barry on Wednesday, May 16

It is part of the 'Dying Matters' Awareness Week, which sees events taking place all over the UK to help break down the taboo.

Ceri-Lou explained: "By having conversations with our loved ones, we can find out what their final wishes are and honour them accordingly."

"Discussing our wishes now, while we can, will hopefully take away some of that unnecessary pressure at what will already be a difficult time".

Industry experts will be on may have, including funeral directors, celebrants and ministers, florists, experts in cremation and funeral care.

Various memorial keepsakes, memory blankets and teddy bears will be on display and there will be an opportunity for informal discussions over refreshments for anyone who just wants to start the 'big conversation' and think about their own wishes.
